The Never Trump movement was never a monolithic entity. There were a variety of reasons why conservatives opposed Trump. Some objected to his personal style, which they saw as vulgar and unpresidential. Others were concerned about his lack of experience in government and his authoritarian tendencies. Still others were worried about his policy positions, which they saw as too extreme or ill-conceived.

Despite their differences, the Never Trumpers were united in their opposition to Trump. They worked to raise awareness of his unfitness for office and to support other Republican candidates in the primaries. They also organized protests and rallies against Trump.

The Never Trump movement was ultimately unsuccessful in preventing Trump's election. However, it did help to legitimize the opposition to him within the Republican Party. After Trump's election, many Never Trumpers continued to criticize his policies and actions. They also worked to support Democratic candidates in the 2018 midterm elections.

The Origins of the Never Trump Movement

The Never Trump movement began in the early days of the 2016 Republican primary. As Trump began to rise in the polls, a number of conservative elites began to speak out against him. In May 2016, a group of 50 Republican national security experts signed an open letter stating that Trump was "unfit to be President." The letter cited Trump's "dangerous" foreign policy views, his "erratic" temperament, and his "disregard for the truth."

In the months leading up to the election, the Never Trump movement grew in size and influence. A number of high-profile Republicans, including former President George H.W. Bush, former Secretary of State Colin Powell, and former Defense Secretary Robert Gates, endorsed Hillary Clinton. The movement also organized a series of protests and rallies against Trump.

The Impact of the Never Trump Movement

The Never Trump movement had a significant impact on the 2016 election. It helped to legitimize the opposition to Trump within the Republican Party. It also raised awareness of Trump's unfitness for office.

The Never Trump movement is a reminder that there are still principled conservatives who are willing to stand up for what they believe in. The movement may not have been successful in preventing Trump's election, but it did help to keep alive the flame of conservatism in the United States.
