The activists were part of a group called the Vietnam Veterans Against the War (VVAW). They had served in Vietnam and had come home disillusioned with the war and the government's lies about it. They were determined to speak out against the war and to help end it.

The Navy pilot was named John Kerry. He was a highly decorated pilot who had flown over 100 combat missions in Vietnam. He had seen the horrors of war firsthand and had come to believe that it was a mistake. He was also disillusioned with the government's handling of the war.

In 1971, Kerry and the VVAW joined forces to form the Vietnam Veterans Against the War/Winter Soldier Investigation (VVAW/WSI). The VVAW/WSI held a series of hearings in which Vietnam veterans testified about their experiences in the war. The hearings were a powerful indictment of the war and helped to turn public opinion against it.

Kerry's involvement in the VVAW/WSI was controversial. He was accused of being a traitor and a communist. But he remained steadfast in his opposition to the war. He testified before Congress about the war and spoke out against it at rallies and demonstrations.

The VVAW/WSI's hearings were a turning point in the Vietnam War. They helped to raise public awareness of the war's horrors and to turn public opinion against it. The hearings also helped to embolden other anti-war activists and to lead to the eventual end of the war.

Kerry's involvement in the VVAW/WSI was a defining moment in his life. It showed his courage and his commitment to fighting for what he believed in. It also showed that even the most decorated war hero can come to believe that war is wrong.

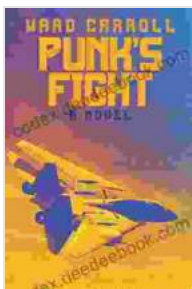

The alliance between the VVAW and Kerry was an unlikely one. But it was a powerful one. It helped to end the Vietnam War and to save countless lives.
