Richard Van Camp's We Sang You Home is a powerful and moving collection of poems that explores the themes of loss, grief, and resilience. Through vivid imagery and lyrical prose, Van Camp gives voice to the pain and longing of those who have lost loved ones, while also offering a glimmer of hope and healing.

The poems in We Sang You Home are deeply personal, drawing on Van Camp's own experiences of loss and grief. He writes about the death of his father, his brother, and his sister, as well as the loss of his home and his culture. These poems are raw and honest, but they are also full of beauty and hope.

Van Camp's writing is lyrical and evocative, and he uses language in a way that is both powerful and subtle. He creates vivid images that stay with the reader long after they have finished reading the poem. In the poem "Elegy for a Brother," Van Camp writes:

"I remember the day you died.
The sun was shining,
And the birds were singing.

But all I could see was darkness,
And all I could hear was silence.”

The pain and grief in these lines is palpable, but there is also a sense of beauty and hope. The sun is still shining, and the birds are still singing, even though the speaker has lost someone they love. This is a reminder that even in the darkest of times, there is always hope.

We Sang You Home is a powerful and moving collection of poems that will resonate with anyone who has ever experienced loss. Van Camp's writing is lyrical and evocative, and he uses language in a way that is both powerful and subtle. These poems are a testament to the power of love and the resilience of the human spirit.
